BITS OF HISTORY

Monte del Gozo (Mount of Joy, 380m) is a hill on the French Way, at scarcely 5km from the Cathedral. From here, pilgrims can get a first glimpse of its towers, which means a great joy for them, and thus derives its name from it. During Middle Ages, reaching the top of this hill was for pilgrims as important as entering the cathedral, as by discerning the town, they felt that they were reaching at last their goal, leaving behind months of perils and difficulties. Among the many traditions connected to Monte do Gozo, there is an ancient one that established that, when a group of pilgrims arrived, the first in seeing the towers of the cathedral was named "king", and the rest of them had to address to him or her thus.

The pilgrims which crossed Monte do Gozo on its way to Compostela also stopped to visit San Lorenzo's Church, in which, according to popular tradition, lies the body of a pilgrim who had died along the way, but who was helped by Santiago itself to get there. He is the protagonist of one of the miracles recollected in de Codex Calixtinus which tell us not only the solidarity to a dead pilgrim, but also to the only one among his companions who stayed with him on his final hours.

An aerial photograph of a camp, likely a summer camp, with a title overlay. The camp features several long, rectangular buildings with dark roofs, arranged in rows. There are numerous trees scattered throughout the camp, and a large, circular, open area in the center. The background shows a forested area and distant mountains. The entire image has a strong red color cast. A white double-line rectangular border frames the title text.
